How Consumerism Affects Teen Society

February 27, 2013

Frederic Somm, aged 18 years, writes this essay.

Young people who are developing into grown-ups will face many problems, like wondering, "Who am I?" Some teenagers, as well as some adults, have low self-esteem and are quite insecure. They need something that defines them or gives them personality – they need to find themselves in a way, but how?

This world consists of more than seven billion people. That means we have a lot of people around us, in so-called competition with us. Competition is everywhere, especially in the teenage years. From the way you look, to your education, to the beauty of your partner, your social status or your interests, such as sports or a musical instrument – everything is important. Almost every teen lacks self-confidence at some point and so has even more of a struggle to fit in somewhere.

02. A usual problem described in the beginning of the text above is related to:

- a) Identity.
- b) Selfishness.
- c) Overpopulation.
- d) Origin.
- e) Adulthood dilemmas.

03. The underlined pronoun "them" underlined in the text refers to:

- a) Young people.
- b) People.
- c) Some teenagers.
- d) Some adults.
- e) Some teenagers and some adults.

04. All the sentences are correct, except in:

- a) Frederic is 18.
- b) Our planet is home for over seven billion people.
- c) Competition is not a problem nowadays.
- d) Teenagers are anxious to belong to a group.
- e) The boy in the text has financial problems.
